Unprecedented Drought in the West.

Cinicago, October 6.

The drouth now prevailing in the West is probably unequalled in its history, certainly for the past twenty-five years. All through the central and Souther of Properties of the past twenty-five years at difficulty in observations are completely dried up, and the streams are completely dried up, and the stre streams are completely dried up, and the inhabitants find great difficulty in obtaining sufficient water to supply the necessities of their household and their stock. Many of the wealthest farmers are engaged in sinking artisan wells, preferring to incur this heavy expenditure, at the than trusting to the natural supply.

A sentiment is being aroused which may probably compel Judge Barnard to rather than trusting to the natural supply for the future. So dry is the soil that the fall plowing is rendered almost impossible. This fact is true, not only in central and Southern Illinois, but also in Northern Illinois and all through Wisconsin.
